and his assistance in making it applicable.

The meeting was not strictly political in its nature in spite of the fact that most of those present were politicians. There was a tendency to turn to lighter things and the "merry jest and quip" were often passed. Those disposed to find hidden meaning beneath svery meeting of politicians might have imagined the affair a love-feast, but there was avidently little of this spirit. The presence of several prominent figures, motably Benator La Folletta, showed that the gathering was not entirely Democratic although it might be theroughly progressive in sentiment.

to resign from the office, which he has held for twenty years, on account of failing health.

The resolutions expressed profound regret that at such a crisis in the affairs of the college, it should be necessary for Dr. Silvester to leave. The buildings which were destroyed by fire will have to be rebuilt, and the absence of Dr. Silvester, who has for so long guided the affairs of the college, will be sorely feit.

The resolutions congratulate the college, however, upon the fact that as president emeritus and librarian, Dr. Silvester will not sever his connection with the college entirely, and will be on hand in any emergency.

Thus she svolves what may be declared to be an absolutely new Viola, a part teeming with the comedy's natural humor, revealed with a finesse hither-to-not seen on the American state. to not seen on the American stage. Sheer Wonder At Her Part.

It goes, of course, that the supporting company, thoroughly in accord with the spirit of the star, gave of their best; the scenic investiture, the musical setting, the stage craft, all are in harmony with The Great Idea. And so it is little at which to marvel that no it is little at which to marve that the generous audience, one nationally representative, one acholastically criti-cal, should forget even to acclaim the creatrix of this new Viola, rapt as they were by sheer, childish admiration for he grace and beauty of it all. the grace and beauty of it all.

Mr. Sothern's Malvollo was humanly a satire. One could not help pitying the falcon of gay plumage, self-schooled in the ways of love, plucked and caged, 'and crying out his madness still. The delicacy of the qomedy in this part is executed with a grandiloquence which accentuates the situation in which the hapless exquisite soon is to find himself.
